The Bruar is a small stream which has its rise in the Grampians, and eventually becomes a tributary of the Garry. It pursues a troubled course through lovely and romantic scenery, in one part forming the celebrated "Falls of Bruar" with leaps of 12, 50 and 200 feet. In 1787 Burns wrote a poem "The Humble Petition of Bruar Water" in response to which the Duke of Atholl caused trees to be planted and walks laid out on its banks.
